We have developed a three-dimensional (3-D) measurement system of airborne particles using shadowgraphic imaging and a liquid crystal projector. The 3-D shadowgram created by the airborne particles is projected using the liquid crystal projector onto a charge-coupled-device video camera as an image sensor. The shadowgraphic images of particles that were deposited on a white screen are photographed and are digitally processed to obtain the projection profile, which is then converted into 3-D images by the algorithm of intensity projection. The real-time 3-D images of particles of different sizes and shapes are obtained by a single time-lapse measurement. The time necessary to measure the 3-D image is less than 1 s. This method can distinguish particles with sizes down to a diameter of 10 microm and can be applied for the classification of particles.#!/usr/bin/env perl ## This file is part of moses.
