Anisotropy in the Er:YIG under uniaxial magnetic field: simulation based on finite-difference time-domain method. An anisotropic material is widely used in the microwave region because of its many unique characteristics, and its anisotropy has been a topic of interest for some time. In this paper, we report our theoretical analysis on the anisotropy of the Er:YIG with uniaxial magnetic field up to 60kOe. Such anisotropy is found to be dependent on the location of the sample and the direction of the applied magnetic field. To verify our theoretical analysis, we performed a finite-difference time-domain (FDTD) simulation for the sample under an uniaxial magnetic field. For comparison, we also calculated the fields around the sample in both the numerical and analytical plane-wave methods. Moreover, we have studied the relationship between the magnetic field induced anisotropy of the Er:YIG and the effective magnetic anisotropy constant of the rare-earth-ion-doped YIG under the applied magnetic field. Our simulation results showed good agreement with our theoretical analysis.

Centre for Scenic Studies The Centre for Scenic Studies is a research unit of the University of Sussex, England. The Centre was founded in 2002 as a research unit of the School of Arts and Communication, and has now expanded and consists of five research departments: Art, Film and Television, English Literature, Media Studies and Media and Cultural Studies. The Centre has an advisory board of eminent scholars. The Centre's research emphasizes a critical approach to the study of art and film. Its current research projects focus on issues of film aesthetics, film and media, gender studies and literature and cinema studies. The Centre is currently located in the Arts and Commerce Building (ACHB) in Brighton. References External links Centre for Scenic Studies University of Sussex Category:University of Sussex
