JPEG _JPEG_ (pronounced "jay-peg"), short for _Joint Photographic Experts Group_, is an open standard for compressing digital images. It's commonly used for compressed images that are saved to disk, as in the electronic JPEG of a camera-generated image that includes a bar code. JPEG images are usually smaller in file size than TIFFs. Both TIFF and JPEG are most commonly used for "crunching" images down for Web use. The two main strengths of JPEG are that it's very small in file size and it's easy to work with in a pixel-by-pixel color-correction environment, such as Photoshop. A disadvantage is that it doesn't include as much information as TIFF, so some colors may be more distorted. There are also a number of unique circumstances in which JPEG files may not be available. In addition to the originals of the images I've seen, there are examples of JPEGs that are only available in lower resolution than the original to help promote certain products, or even advertisements. Q: How to set custom picker when using metal or ui I am trying to create a form with a picker that looks like the one in iTunes: I need to programatically build this form in Swift, and I am using ui library and metal libraries, so I didn't find how to build this picker in swift. In iTunes I am using this kind of picker, and as I see it is created with the library Eel-Picker ( How can I set this picker as a ui picker in swift, with a custom image and with a custom title? A: You can use any UIKit control. Metal is just a rendering API with some additional properties and constraints, it does not restrict you to use UIKit and all other common libraries with it. There are many ways you could implement it. One of the "easiest" way is to create your own UIPickerView subclass, set your own data source and delegate. For more information about that see UIPickerView or this other answer. Another way would be to use an existing one, there are many libraries that implement pickers with different features. The thrombospondins: beyond cell-ECM interactions. The mammalian thrombospondins (TSPs) are a family of closely related modular glycoproteins composed of three identical repeating trimeric units. They exist as secreted and transmembrane proteins and, like the fibrinogen-like molecule Sp-2, are capable of binding to a number of different proteins and other molecules of the extracellular matrix. They have been implicated in a number of important physiological and pathological processes including cell migration, cell-cell and cell-matrix interactions, angiogenesis, wound healing, epithelial cell and lens cell differentiation, tumour cell metastasis and osteogenesis. It is likely that the interactions of TSPs with their putative receptors are dependent on the matrix and cell context, and that more than one receptor may be involved. and they will check my number plate as they go through the car. So I'm going to take this in a direction that doesn't stop here. There is a retail chain that sells some of my books and they have a program where if someone buys a book for a friend they can keep the sale price, even if the friend has bought the book already. It's called The Library Book Club. So this Christmas I bought a book for my mother-in-law. Normally I would have just ignored the problem, as I have done before, but this time I couldn't. My mother-in-law doesn't know it yet, but she was going to get that book and her daughter would get a book for her for Christmas. So I hunted for the book on the book club site. Sure enough, it was still there. So I ordered my mother-in-law the book. No charge. In the meantime, her daughter is going to get my mother-in-law a book as a gift and make sure she puts it in the book club, so her daughter will get one for free as well. As a by-the-way, the two books I gave them are by Arthur C. Clarke, a science-fiction author. Now, I don't know what mental state this brings you to. If you are feeling sorry for me, I appreciate your kind intentions. If you are thinking of calling my mother-in-law up and complaining to her, please don't. This is all to
