The epidemiology of chronic urticaria is not well known. However, there is now some evidence that it is quite important. It is commonly classified as chronic in nature. This is the result of the diagnostic delay that can last from months to years. It can lead to systemic and functional manifestations as well as complications. It is estimated that approximately 1 to 5% of the population have chronic urticaria with various autoinflammatory mechanisms or autoimmune or autoallergic mechanisms. Chronic urticaria is not well known and it frequently goes unnoticed for a long time. The severity of urticaria is variable and it is a symptom and not a diagnosis. The degree of activity and discomfort are difficult to assess. The best methods for the determination of these scales are objective and/or subjective and/or quantitative. Despite its polygenic cause and the difficulty in finding a specific marker, allergy plays a major role in the aetiology of chronic urticaria. Genetics have an important role. As is the case for other autoinflammatory diseases, chronic urticaria is associated with genes that are related to innate immunity. Activation of the innate immune system represents a turning point in the course of chronic urticaria. The triggers associated with the onset of chronic urticaria are several: food, drugs, infection, stress, physical factors and rarely psychological factors. There are many triggering factors, especially in chronic idiopathic urticaria, for which it is not possible to assert that one is the more likely reason. Genetic factors are related to

The firms had offered different prices, and the company that had won the contract was backed by a Delhi-based law firm that had previously done business for the government." so perhaps I read it wrong, or there was more to it. so whats your reading? ~~~ a3n Maybe they ran out of money, and forked over a contract that in retrospect should have been struck out and rebid. ----- gravypod I'm going to assume that the law firm backing the second company invested a lot of time helping you win this contract. This article has slightly more to it. ~~~ krisives It's a hefty fine so a wasted effort, much more likely that just money ~~~ flukus It's a wasted effort to pour a tank of gas into the ground if you're sitting on a gas trap. ----- chrisbennet _Once a shuttle program begins, no one can change its design except to refund the cost of the original bid or declare it a loss, according to an official advice to Delhi government._ Shuttle service is required for the at-door delivery of files to governments._ So, if your business plan didn't allow you to take out a loan, you aren't allowed to get one?
